

GENERAL'S "MOTHER-HUBBARD"

To an earlier generation, accustomed to call what we now know as a "wrapper" or a "housedress" by a different name, the term "mother-hubbard" had a distinct political significance.

It was used to characterize a certain type of platform—that is, one which "covers everything and touches nothing."

The description precisely fits the position taken thusfar by General Eisenhower.

For months he has been challenged to say where he stands on the great public issues of the times, the problems and questions which must be passed upon by the American people through the medium of the forthcoming presidential election.

If we are not to discard the concept of self-government as an outdated and outmoded theory, as "decadent" as Hitler said democracy was, then we must accept the principle that the great issues of the times ought to be fully debated, pro and con, as a necessary part of the campaigns.

They cannot be debated if the principal contenders refuse or refrain from stating their position regarding them.

Of the two major Republican candidates, Senator Taft and General Eisenhower, one has gone the whole limit in clarifying his own stand, and the other has gone the limit in concealing and withholding his views.

Senator Taft has abundant courage, and it has never occurred to him to evade the question of his opinions, once they have been formulated. He has voted in Senatorial roll-calls without number, has led the Republican bloc in the Senate as floor-leader on a great variety of issues, has formally debated with President Truman two major questions (taxes and labor law) and both times wound up holding the Republicans together and getting more support from the Democrats in Congress than the White House was able to muster.

His statements and writings with regard to the Taft-Hartley Labor Law would fill a large volume, and he recently brought out an entire book to tell where he stands on the subject of foreign policy.

He isn't the sort of public figure for whom the gag-line was invented—"he took a firm and courageous straddle."

But General Eisenhower has been in the process of a most undignified straddle ever since this campaign began. He hasn't even been able to make his decisions stick when he refused to make any decisions. Earlier he said he wasn't going to campaign, wasn't going to make any "political" announcements. Yet these have been trickling out, officially and unofficially, often full of contradictions, and with none of the courageous forthrightness one ought to be able to expect.

Take the question of foreign-aid giveaways. One of the General's numerous "proxies," talking without actual authorization but magically appearing to read the General's mind, recently assured a big television audience that the General shares the same do-gooder desire to "help" our foreign neighbors that led Truman, Marshall, Acheson and others to ladle out billions of American dollars without either peace or security to show for it.

A few days later the General himself was responsible for a release saying in effect that the proposed Congressional cuts in foreign aid would take the heart out of our European allies.

Then another couple days, and there came along a statement saying that he was in favor of cutting any waste, redundancies, etc., out of the foreign aid appropriation.

Here we have an example of the ultra-careful type of approach which, translated into the field of military operations, would be termed timid and hesitant.

His "proxy" waved a hat, so to speak, from behind a rock to draw the fire of whomever might be gunning for the General. Even the "proxy" was presented as a volunteer that the General could disclaim and disown and treat as "expendable", if the outcome dictated such policy.

Then the General issued two separate and inconsistent statements, both of them fragmentary, neither of them really enlightening, and neither of them, to put it bluntly, either courageous nor inspiring.

Take the subject of FEPC. Here again the General has perpetrated a straddle of the type that lead to the invention of the term, "mother-hubbard" platform.

There is a quotation of his which has been repeated many times indicating a pious hope that sometime in the future, races,

STEEL WORKS MAY CHANGE VALLEY'S BASIC CHARACTER

This is One of Conclusions Drawn by Federal Reserve Bank

ACCESS TO MARKETS

Mid-Atlantic - New England Regions Can Be Reached Economically

Construction of the big, New Fairless steel works near Morrisville, may be only the beginning of a development that could change the basic character of the Delaware River valley. This is one of the conclusions of an article in the May Business Review of the Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia. Iron and steel, the Bank points out, are integrated plants which consume its products and supply the materials, goods, and services needed for the operation and maintenance of the steel mill itself.

The Delaware River valley now has a steelmaking capacity of almost six million tons a year. But of the seven steel mills along the Delaware and its tributaries, only two of the installations — those at Conshohocken and at Bethlehem — are integrated plants which can convert ore and other raw materials into finished steel products. Five non-integrated mills make steel from pig iron and scrap. All of these plants are landlocked in

SATURDAY, MAY 17, 1952

KOREAN BLACK MARKET

A report from the Army stating that in a 13-month period, beginning in January, 1951, $5,000,000 worth of U. S. goods of all types has been stolen in Korea, has been presented to a congressional subcommittee. Great quantities of this, the report continues, wound up in the Korean black market.

Apparently anticipating raised eyebrows, and perhaps worse, from the subcommittee, the Army hastened to add that $2,000,000 worth of the goods has been recovered and that recovery is continuing at the rate of $40,000 a month.

Two factors are responsible, as the Army sees it. The Korean government has been singularly apathetic toward attempts by U. S. military authorities to stamp out the black market. And U. S. troop units which would normally be assigned guard duty over extensive supply dumps in Korea have been moved up into combat.

Remedial actions have been taken, the military says, and the supply pipelines to the front remain unaffected.

It is obvious the Army has a problem on its hands. The complete breakdown of the Korean economy and the halting of all normal traffic in goods and services produced conditions under which black markets thrive.

The presence of mammoth supply dumps invites theft, and cumbersome operating methods of the Army logistics setup raises the question how the Army was able to ascertain, within reasonable limits, how much has been swiped.

The Army's claim that it is getting some of its stolen goods back implies the thefts have not been stopped. If that is so, fine. This drainage of war material is, after all, small potatoes alongside the theft of supplies that went on in Europe, and it is tiny when compared to the $29,000,000,000 in war surplus which was allowed to evaporate following the war.

But that doesn't excuse waste in Korea.

NEGLECTED MAIL BOXES

When driving along some of the back roads it is not uncommon to see dilapidated mail boxes, which owners obviously have neglected. With the thought of correcting this situation the Post Office Department is calling upon the owners of rural boxes to improve all such receptacles which are not in good condition.

The purpose of rural mail delivery is to serve residents outside of the cities and towns. The government supplies the service. It is incumbent upon box holders to do their part.

POWELL EFFECTIVE AGAINST BENSEALEM

FALLSINGTON, May, 17—Larry Powell pitched effective ball here yesterday as Pennsbury High took undisputed possession of first place in the Lower Bucks County League, nosing out Bensalem Township High, 6-5, on the winner's diamond.

Powell allowed the Owls but four hits and had a no-run no-hit game going in the sixth. He was nipped for five runs in the final two frames, melting an early 5-0 lead his mates had given him.

Bob Whitfield was the loser. Whitfield was solved for the winning run in the last half of the seventh. Granville Mayo opened the canto by drawing a walk. Kemble sacrificed him to second and he moved to third on a passed ball. On Bennett's fly to right, Mayo crossed the plate.

Bensalem scored two markers in the sixth when Russ Struble got the first Owls' hit, a single. Crowthers also hit safely and when Mikelaits walked, the bags were populated. Whitfield whiffed. Robinson lifted a fly to left. Struble crossing. When Mayo booted Sciolli's grounder, Crowthers scored.

Coach Marlon VanHorn's team knotted the count in the fifth. Parker was passed. Welsh struck out. Struble walked. Crowthers forced Struble. Joe Mikelaits singled, scoring Parker. Whitfield was safe on an error. Crowthers crossing. Mikelaits scored when Robinson beat out a hit.

GARAFOTA PITCHES A NO-HIT, NO-RUN GAME; SCORE 4 TO 0

Joe Garafota pitched the first no-hit no-run game of the 1952 Bristol Softball League last evening as Pacific Steel won over the Auto Boys nine, 4-0, on Memorial field.

Garafota turned in a masterful job in not permitting a hit. Only three players reached base, two on walks and another on an error. After the first two batters reached first in the initial inning, Garafota retired every batter until Joe Frank walked after one was gone in the seventh. Garafota had eight strikeouts.

Manager "Jim" Capecci did the hurling for his team. Jim did exceptionally well but was ruined by the bat of Garafota who made two of his team's six hits.

In the second after Bob Caione doubled, Garafota singled him home. Garafota scored a moment later when Andy Accardi committed an error on Ruggeri's single to left. With Caione and Cauci on base in the fourth, Garafota drove in both runners with a hit to left.

General's "Mother-Hubbard"

sects and colors will merge into oblivion in the American melting pot. The Negroes and Jews of the north have been told that the General favors the "principle" of the FEPC, while he has courted the support of the Southern Whites by declining to go on record as indorsing its compulsory features.

So with other issues—the labor issue, for instance the matter of national finances and inflation, and so down the line. There is, in fact, only one single political issue where General Eisenhower's position is clearcut and unequivocal — the issue of compulsory military service, and already it has been brought out that his insistence upon this program, in the light of the position taken by a great many Republican Congressmen who have learned from their correspondence how deep-seated is the public's resistance, would break the party apart if he is nominated.

This is a serious matter, worth more attention than thus far given to it. One way of describing what happened to the Republicans in 1948 is to say that Dewey and Warren, neither of whom had any background in national legislation, allowed themselves to be maneuvered by Mr. Truman into "running against the Republican Congress," and got licked as a consequence.

At any event, the pothole which has developed over the one issue where the General has taken a stand may be the explanation for the reluctance he and his associates are showing to take a stand on anything else.

They may feel that Taft's courageousness and frankness have estranged groups of voters here and there: that except for the loss of support the Senator has suffered because he spoke out fearlessly he would be quite unbeatable.

Feeling that way, they may be determined to follow a course of being "all things to all men", ducking all issues, playing "both sides of the street," and refusing to take a firm stand on any further public questions whatever, lest thereby they estrange some potential supporter.

Will the American voter stand for that?

the sense that they have to depend upon rail transportation for delivery of iron ores, fuel, and other materials to the furnace-side. The location of a new integrated mill on the Delaware River gives it good access to water transportation. When the Fairless mill goes into full operation, the Business Review says, the Delaware River valley's steelmaking capacity will be increased by one-third; moreover, since the Middle Atlantic and the New England regions can be reached economically by coast-wise water transportation, the mill's geographic location will place it in an excellent position to serve eastern markets.

The eastern markets not only are short of over-all steel capacity but are especially in need of capacity for certain particular kinds of finished and semi-finished steel. An unusually large part of the local steel-producing capacity is heavy casting and forging steel and steel plates. The region is notably lacking in finishing facilities for bars, galvanized products, and light sheet steel. These and other deficiencies of the area will be taken care of, in part at least, by the new plant, and as long as steel in large quantities continues to be an indispensable requirement in the defense preparation of our allies abroad a plant on the Delaware River is in a strategic location for making economic foreign shipments.

One of the chief factors leading to the establishment of a new steel-making and industrial empire in the Delaware River valley has been the changing raw material situation. Reserves of high-grade iron ores in the Great Lakes region are declining, and it is necessary to draw on new sources in South America and Canada as well as older foreign sources — all accessible by sea from the Delaware River.

The Bank points out that although the new Fairless plant and other possible industrial developments are not far distant from established industrial areas in Philadelphia and Trenton, their coming will have a tremendous impact on small local communities in the immediate vicinity. They will require whole new cities of homes. The steel mill alone will employ more workers than the total population of Morrisville, which is close by. Two residential building developments, Fairless Hills and Levittown, will help meet the need in the Morrisville area, and many other builders within a radius of twenty miles will be immediately affected.

The expansion taking place in lower Bucks County's population is over-loading all facilities. Waterworks and sewerage-treatment plants must be provided. Most of the schools are overcrowded and many pupils are attending half-sessions. Additional police and fire protection will have to be obtained. The industrial boom brings problems as well as promise. The problems are being solved as best they can, as indeed they must, for the steel works are rapidly approaching completion and other plants are thinking of coming into the area.

GENERAL'S "MOTHER-HUBBARD"

To an earlier generation, accustomed to call what we now know as a "wrapper" or a "housedress" by a different name, the term "mother-hubard" had a distinct political significance.

It was used to characterize a certain type of platform—that is, one which "covers everything and touches nothing."

The description precisely fits the position taken thus far by General Eisenhower.

For months he has been challenged to say where he stands on the great public issues of the times, the problems and questions which must be passed upon by the American people through the medium of the forthcoming presidential election.

If we are not to discard the concept of self-government as an outdated and outmoded theory, as "decadent" as Hitler said democracy was, then we must accept the principle that the great issues of the times ought to be fully debated, pro and con, as a necessary part of the campaigns.

They cannot be debated if the principal contenders refuse or refrain from stating their position regarding them.

Of the two major Republican candidates, Senator Taft and General Eisenhower, one has gone the whole limit in clarifying his own stand, and the other has gone the limit in concealing and withholding his views.

Senator Taft has abundant courage, and it has never occurred to him to evade the question of his opinions, once they have been formulated. He has voted in Senatorial roll-calls without number, has led the Republican bloc in the Senate as floor leader on a great variety of issues, has formally debated with President Truman two major questions (taxes and labor law) and both times wound up holding the Republicans together and getting more support from the Democrats in Congress than the White House was able to muster.

His statements and writings with regard to the Taft-Hartley Labor Law would fill a large volume, and he recently brought out an entire book to tell where he stands on the subject of foreign policy.

He isn't the sort of public figure for whom the gag-line was invented—"he took a firm and courageous straddle."

But General Eisenhower has been in the process of a most undignified straddle ever since this campaign began. He hasn't even been able to make his decisions stick when he refused to make any decisions. Earlier he said he wasn't going to campaign, wasn't going to make any "political" announcements. Yet these have been trickling out, officially and unofficially, often full of contradictions, and with none of the courageous forthrightness one ought to be able to expect.

Take the question of foreign-aid giveaways. One of the General's numerous "proxies," talking without actual authorization but magically appearing to read the General's mind, recently assured a big television audience that the General shares the same do-gooder desire to "help" our foreign neighbors that led Truman, Marshall, Acheson and others to ladle out billions of American dollars without either peace or security to show for it.

A few days later the General himself was responsible for a release saying in effect that the proposed Congressional cuts in foreign aid would take the heart out of our European allies.

Then another couple days, and there came along a statement saying that he was in favor of cutting any waste, redundancies, etc., out of the foreign aid appropriation.

Here we have an example of the ultra-careful type of approach which, translated into the field of military operations, would be termed timid and hesitant.

His "proxy" waved a hat, so to speak, from behind a rock to draw the fire of whomever might be gunning for the General. Even the "proxy" was presented as a volunteer that the General could disclaim and disown and treat as "expedient", if the outcome dictated such policy.

Then the General issued two separate and inconsistent statements, both of them fragmentary, neither of them really enlightening, and neither of them, to put it bluntly, either courageous nor inspiring.

Take the subject of FEPC. Here again the General has perpetrated a straddle of the type that lead to the invention of the term, "mother-hubard" platform.

There is a quotation of his which has been repeated many times indicating a pious hope that sometime in the future, races,

Mid-Atlantic - New England Regions Can Be Reached Economically

Construction of the big, New Fairless steel works near Morrisville, may be only the beginning of a development that could change the basic character of the Delaware River valley. This is one of the conclusions of an article in the May Business Review of the Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia. Iron and steel, the Bank points out, is an industry that inevitably attracts many other industries which consume its products and supply the materials, goods, and services needed for the operation and maintenance of the steel mill itself.

The Delaware River valley now has a steelmaking capacity of almost six million tons a year. But of the seven steel mills along the Delaware and its tributaries, only two of the installations — those at Conshohocken and at Bethlehem — are integrated plants which can convert ore and other raw materials into finished steel products. Five non-integrated mills make steel from pig iron and scrap. All of these plants are landlocked in

THREE ACCIDENTS CAUSE INJURY TO TEN INDIVIDUALS

Bus, 2 Cars Crash On Lincoln Highway, Near Philadelphia City Line

ANDALUSIA ACCIDENT

Parents and Child Are Hurt; Also Three Air Force Men Injured

Injuries to 10 people and damage to five vehicles including a bus, were chalked up in a trio of accidents in Bensalem and Bristol townships last night and this morning. One of the crashes, involving two passenger cars and a bus, occurred on the Lincoln highway, near Phila. city line. The other accident was at Andalusia, and the third at intersection of Newport and Newportville roads.

Six were injured in a triple vehicle crash at 8:30 last evening on the Lincoln highway, a block east of Phila. city line, Bensalem township.

Those hurt, according to Wm. Peck, investigating officer:

John Boardman, 2200 block of E. Fifth st., Phila., slight laceration of forehead.

Mrs. Alice Boardman, 23, wife of above, possible concussion of brain. John Boardman, aged two, son of above, laceration of forehead.

Charles Barker, Castonia, N. C., a member of the U. S. Air Force, stationed at Camp Kilmer, N. J., contusions of arm and chest.

The Boardmans were riding in the car operated by John Boardman; and the three young men from Camp Kilmer were in the passenger vehicle driven by Barker, it is stated.

According to Officer Peck, Barker was travelling west, and when unable to stop quickly enough to avoid traffic in front of him, he swerved to the left center, and crashed head-on into the Boardman machine which was travelling east. A bus, operated by Arthur Goes, Bristol R. D., plowed into the rear of the Boardman car.

POWELL EFFECTIVE AGAINST BENSALEM

FALLSINGTON, May, 17—Larry Powell pitched effective ball here yesterday as Pennsylvania High took undisputed possession of first place in the Lower Bucks County League, 6-5, on the winner's diamond.

Powell allowed the Owls but four hits and had a no-run no-hit game going in the sixth. He was nipped for five runs in the final two frames, melting an early 5-0 lead his mates had given him.

Bob Whitfield was the loser. Whitfield was solved for the winning run in the last half of the seventh. Granville Mayo opened the canto by drawing a walk. Kemble sacrificed him to second and he moved to third on a passed ball. On Bennett's fly to right, Mayo crossed the plate.

Bensalem scored two markers in the sixth when Russ Struble got the first Owls' hit, a single. Crowthers also hit safely and when Mikellatis walked, the bags were populated. Whitfield whiffed. Robinson lifted a fly to left, Struble crossing. When Mayo booted Sciolli's grounder, Crowthers scored.

Coach Marlon VanHorn's team knotted the count in the fifth. Parker was passed. Welsh struck out. Struble walked. Crowthers forced Struble. Joe Mikellatis singled, scoring Parker. Whitfield was safe on an error. Crowthers crossing. Mikellatis scored when Robinson beat out a hit.
